ABSTRACT

This directory is an attempt to identify arts and humanities programs and courses in the elementary and secondary school of the San Francisco Bay Area as perceived by teachers and administrators who have developed them. Questionnaires were distributed, and interpretation was left up to the person filling them out as to what constitutes the humanities, integrated arts, and other interdisciplinary courses. Little editorial control was exerted on the reports, and, in most cases, information and descriptions were left in the words of the person who sent them in. The responses are arranged by county alphabetically: then alphabetically by educational level. Questionnaires are one page in length, and request information about the type of course taught, its organization, content, and activity emphasis, and major resources used. A brief narrative description of the program or course is also included. (Author/OPH)

Dear Colleagues:

This directory is an attempt to identify arts and humanities programs and courses in the elementary and secondary schools of the San Francisco Bay Area as perceived by teachers and administrators who have developed them. The questionnaires that were distributed left up to the persons filling them out the interpretation of what constitutes humanities, integrated arts, and other interdisciplinary courses. The variety and richness of the programs and courses that are reported herein should impress every member of the California Humanities Association. The information collected should also enliven the discussion of the "definition" of humanities in the schools.

In compiling this directory for the California Humanities Association we have exerted very little editorial control on the reports. Information and descriptions were, in most instances, left in the words of the person who sent them. We appreciate very much the time and effort spent by the respondents.

This directory is not a survey. No effort was made to keep track of the number of questionnaires that were not returned. The intent has been to provide an informational and descriptive report on humanities activities in this area by persons interested in this aspect of education. We are encouraged by the response to our request for information and we feel that teachers, administrators, board members, and citizens should take heed of the burgeoning efforts in art, humanities, and interdisciplinary education and take steps to make them a permanent part of school district programs.

For easy reference the responses are arranged as follows:

- 1. By county alphabetically
- By elementary, junior high, secondary groupings within each county
- Alphabetically within the categories defined in #2 above

Roger O'Connor, Coordinator of Humanities Contra Costa County School Department

While Spanish is taught to about 1/5 of the students here, there really is no on-going program in the arts and humanities.

Class trips to museums, occasional music appreciation lessons or art appreciation lessons or similar activities are carried on.

At present, we have ordered a number of records for the 72-73 school year to build up our music appreciation library. We are also about to embark on a club program which will involve some activities in the fine arts.

This spring, fifty 6th grade boys and girls will produce a version of the Broadway musical, Oklahoma. All the songs of the show will be included, plus square dancing, dialogue, a double cast to give maximum opportunity for principal roles, scenery, costumes, lights, sound, and student accompaniment. The show will be performed at our own elementary school on our multipurpose room stage. Everything will be done by the students.

Using available school teaching aids, I give my class instruction in French language about 40 minutes a week. My college minor was French.

Because of a background in Spanish, my class receives 10-15 minutes of instruction per week. This includes primarily a basic vocabulary with emphasis on nouns, adjectives and simple idioms. These are taught through flannelgraph materials, flash-card games and a notebook.

My literature section includes a rather extensive unit on poetry. This includes weekly recitation periods with emphasis on oral interpretation, a study of style, biographical notes on poets and subject matter. Much time is also spent in composition, including nonsense, rhymed verse, narrative and blank verse. The unit is taught through the use of tapes, records, many books, and notebooks.

15. Minority History

Offers a unique opportunity to combine art, literature, and music with history as we present the contributions of minority people to American culture. We are also able to discuss and understand the various psychological and sociological problems and unrest.

Economics and Government Course

The 9th grade course basically covers the philosophy of our economic system and how it operates. It touches on the part played by business, labor, and farmers as an organized group.

A comparison is made with the Communist countries, their basic philosophy, operation, and goals. Current trends between the American economic system and the Russian economic system is included.

Lastly, economic changes in Oakland and California completes the course.

A three-week period is also programmed for an individual project.

Hopefully, a comprehensive course with 8th grade projects contingent on 7th grade skills. We believe that students can comprehend somewhat involved concepts of design and attempt to make this a learning experience involving manipulation of materials and knowledge of art terminology (4 tests are given during the school year format; essay questions and identification of terms).

ERIC Full Text Provided by ERIC

A definite attempt has been made by us to see that this class does not become an elite or seeded class used by the "college prep" or "more-able" students as a prestige thing. It is open to all juniors and seniors.

An exposure to the arts is its objective and the arts include - art, music, drama, literature, architecture, philosophy, and history. It is team-taught trying to capitalize on the strengths of the two teachers. Where they are short, guest lecturers are brought in from within or without the school and panels comprised of invited guests are used (clergy, writers, poets, etc.) A major project is assigned to each student in their strong field. We have had musical scores composed, movies, slides and narrations, light shows, series of paintings, etc. Generally there is no specific text although we have Will Durant and The Humanities and the Arts.

Field trips play a major part of this course although our district does not help us out on this. We see operas, plays, art exhibits, ACT, etc.

An attempt to stretch their minds a bit, make them curious, and shake their aura of indifference and insularity.

My English 29 (Humanities) course deals primarily with philosophy and literature. I give a 2-3 weeks minicourse in metaphysics to stimulate thinking as opposed to memorizing. We discuss such topics as existence, being, truth, good and evil, cause and effect, etc. The students seem at first confused but later on they seem excited and stimulated by this "new experience." The remainder of the course deals with fairly modern literature, emphasizing soul-searching, self-knowledge, and inner conflicts within the individual. Death of a Salesman (Miller) and Heart of the Matter (Graham Greene) are two of the works covered during this section.

This course is definitely the one course I am skilled at, interested in, and it is the course in which I am particularly stimulating and stimulated.

Through this class, the students (hopefully) gain more appreciation of literature and philosophy, learn more self-acceptance and acceptance of others. I feel that these goals are achieved, and the "proof of the pudding" is that I always have approximately 100 students in this elective class.

- Goals: The main purpose of the course is to help our Chicano students understand their background better from a historical and cultural point of view. Through study of contemporary problems and discussion we aim to have them attain a stronger sense of identity.
- Content activities: We read and discuss about history and contemporary problems concerning the Chicano. We have them cook typical dishes of Mexico; in art we have them copy and imitate typical symbols and art objects of Mexico.
- 3. Student interest: The students seem interested in the class; they are comfortable in it with one another and with the subject matter. Students who took the course before have mentioned they would like to be in the class still.
- 4. Problems encountered: Our Chicano students in this class have in the past found difficulty in reading or sometimes in public expression. We find difficulty in engaging them actively in the material. But they do identify with the class. Their skills and study habits for many are just not there. Those who have them participate more actively.
- 5. Evaluation: In our school the course is necessary. We have close to 30% Chicano students. Because of the small sign-up this year (one class) we were not alle to have an art teacher. I have had to teach the art section myself with the help of a friend. The idea and planning of the course are good. The plan has been to offer sections in music, art, cooking, and social studies in a one-year course, with movies and speakers. This last year we offered some field trips which have also been very good. Many of the students in the group are also members of the Chicano Club and the Club seems to be a good tie-in offering activities such as an annual acution to let the students express themselves and what they have learned in class.
- 6. Other: We could have a section in Mexican dance, skits, and creative writing (poetry especially).

15. Art, music, and drama are an integrated part of the school program in all grades. All teachers, whenever possible, offer the students opportunities to express themselves through the above medias.

In short, in the field of art, the students are given the opportunity to become acquainted with various materials such as string, paper, crayon, chalk, watercolor, papier mache, clay, reed, etc. Also, the students begin their development of the basic concepts of art through the coordination of the above materials. They learn to discriminate among different colors, shapes, and textures thereby allowing each student self-expression. Principles of design and the use of simple perspective are also introduced. Each year the student grows in his knowledge of art. The above mentioned are not only taught as isolated subject matter, but are related to all fields: reading, social studies, and science.

Drama, such as skits, plays, etc., encompass all forms of self-expression incorporating reading, writing, art, and music.

Music is an important part of our school's curriculum. To the primary students general music is taught one day a week. The classroom teacher supplements this program daily. New songs are taught and basic music concepts are stressed. Listening skills are offered in order that the student develop the ability to identify the different instruments. To the intermediate students, music is offered two days a week enlarging upon the basic concepts of music. Chorus is offered to the 4th, 5th, and 6th grades. Band and orchestra are offered also.

Programs which have been presented this year are as follows: A Christmas Pageant which involved K-6, chorus, etc. The band and orchestra have played before the students and the P.T.A.

In the Spring there is a city-wide elementary orchestra and band program.

For two years we have sponsored a foreign language program at San Miguel Elementary School involving approximately fifty youngsters on an interest basis to participate in French and Spanish classes.

The first year we used classrooms, closets, library, etc. This year we found we had no space available at school so we have acquired volunteer parent homes as an outstanding teaching environment. The five homes used have either lovely dens, living room, or a dining room that will accommodate ten to twelve students. A parent coordinates the program sending out flyers, interviewing potential teachers along with the principal, contacting parents and the like. College and high school students in their fourth and fifth year of a foreign language are recommended by the chairman of the department for consideration as a teacher. We met with the teachers once, selected and discussed the expectations for cultural awareness, conversation, guided tours, etc. The uniqueness of this program is the fact that it is being conducted entirely away from school in the homes of parents with a high degree of success. I believe this has some implications in education as to how and where students learn.

The following is a description of a class conducted by one of our high school student teachers:

THE AFTERNOON SPANISH CLASS

We hold the Spanish class at a home right around the corner from the school. Our hostess, Mrs. Hempstead, has been very kind and helps us with anything she can. She has arranged two small tables together in the kitchen surrounded with ten chairs. She provided a snack for the children of cookies and punch every day voluntarily. The kids have enjoyed this but sometimes it was a distraction.

I have started out teaching them basic things like numbers, colors, greetings, week days, months, family members and relatives, clothing, foods, and household objects and claim room objects. With the nouns they have started learning about the gender and adjective agreement (especially having to do with the colors).

Then they learn model sentences in which the infinitive form of verbs could be substituted. For example: I am going- to eat, to sleep, to swim, to dance. The next step will be to teach them how to conjugate the verbs in the present tense.

I have collected pictures from magazines to illustrate what they learn and use them in my teaching. I recently gave each one a picture and asked them to write a little composition describing the picture, using everything they have learned. Spanish is spelled mainly like it sounds, and with a few rules on the sounds of the vowels and a few consonants, they can read and write Spanish fairly well. They have practiced ng the words they have learned in written exercises and occasional ERICes.

One of the class's favorite activities is playing "Spanish Baseball." The teacher "pitches" a first, second, or third base question or word and the player up at "bat" answers or translates and moves to the base which is a designated spot in the room. This is a good review of everything they have learned. Many variations can be thought up and used.

I have found that the third through fifth graders are quick to learn a foreign language as long as their attendance is quite regular. Around ten students is a good number of kids for this situation. They are fun to teach and this has been a valuable experience for me as a teacher.

I think this Spanish program is worthwhile and hope it continues to grow.

Sincerely,

Jayann Bench, Student Ygnacio Valley High School

Survey of Arts and Humanities

We have two programs at Sutter School that you might be interested in. The first, is our Special Enrichment Program, S.E.C. The children list many things that they are interested in doing or in learning about. Then we find as many teachers as possible to work in these areas. (We utilize outside talents if possible also.) The children can then choose three areas that they would like to work in; we try to give as many their first choice as possible.

In the intermediate grades the children go to the S.E.C. classes for 1 week at a time, an hour each afternoon. Some of the classes have been: (1) Experimenting with paint techniques, (2) Sewing, creating stuffed creatures, (3) Knitting and crocheting, (4) Cooking -- Boys' cooking, (5) Creative Dance, (6) Ceramic modeling, (7) Drama -- Acted out on video tape "Julius Caesar" also put production on for several classes, (8) Psychedelic Art done to music using decoupage - acrylics, crayons, etc., (9) Cake decorating, (10) Tie Dye, (11) Macrame, (12) Making their own cameras, taking pictures and developing them, (13) Making radios, (14) Learning the rules to a new sport.

The primary classes are involved in S.E.C. at the present time. They are meeting for an hour at a time two days a week for a period of three weeks. Some of their classes are: (1) Experimenting with things that fly (last week they sent balloons up; so far they have received answers from as far away as Yuba City), (2) Painting on easels with Tempra, experimenting with colors, textures, etc., (3) Building things with scraps of wood, toothpicks, blocks, straws and any other kind of material they think of, (4) Changing materials by dyes, prints, etc., (5) Stitchery - learning basic stitches working on meat platters and on burlap, (6) Drama - "The Three Sillies" (upper grade students are helping on a one-to-one basis), (7) Music - making their own instruments and learning to play on them, (8) Calisthenics, (9) Roller Skating and Bicycle Riding, (10) Magic tricks.

We are also involved in an "Art in Action" program. Each complex chooses a theme and then each class chooses an art media to work in using that theme. The parents are invited to come to school at night and watch the children at work. One group has chosen the theme of designs this year, another will be working with various types of printing methods. One group of teachers is working on making a film, having the children do the drawings for the film on leader film.

5. El	In an attempt to provide a qualitatively different program for the mentally gifted through a regularly scheduled English 8 class, a course of study was planned for 1970-71 which would focus on four areas of concentration. The first two quarters were devoted to vocabulary enrichment and literature study with emphasis on the short story, the novel, and journalism. A third quarter devoted to Humanities study and a fourth to film study/film-making. Having fairly successful, the course has been repeated again this year.

The Humanities segment of the experience is organized thematically with issues of Art and Man magazine serving as bases for weekly research, reading, art and music projects, oral presentations, etc. Each Monday a different theme is introduced. The period of time spent on a given theme is up to the individual. Each Friday written evidence of progress is due from each student and oral reports or presentations are given by eight members of the class.

The 55 students have been divided into two groups which are rotated on a quarterly basis. In the following chart the groups have been labeled (A) and (B).

	1	2	j	4
Cole	(A) The Novel	(B) The Novel	(A) Film-making	(B) Film-making
Hulbert	(B) Short Story	(A) Short Story	(B) Humanities	(B) Humanities

At the eighth grade level it appears a variety of options and flexibility within a program are essential for success. However, these students also need clearly defined course requirements and visible structure.

The course is designed to stimulate student interest in areas that are included in a regular program enriched with additional material and with the addition of student choice through the elective program, whereby students periodically pick a 2 week elective in a specialized area. This year offered electives have been Jack London, Ishi, symbols and culture, architecture, prose and poetry, self portrait, science fiction - Future Shock and African Art. We find extremely high interest in the elective program. Students who are unsuccessful "come to life" during these classes. We have been fortunate to have great administrative cooperation. One problem that we are correcting this quarter is the lack of the so called "fundamentals" being emphasized in our units - subject verb study, etc., and have had a couple of parental questions concerning this. We are planning weekly grammar lessons to compensate. Also, we have felt a need for more writing and are taking care of this now.

The change of classes each quarter has been successful for both the students and each teacher involved. We feel there is a more intensified study than there would be in a regular program.

Mechanics of Program:

- 1. Each teacher teaches 1 group of 30-35 students for 1 quarter. Units taught are: History of Western Art
 History of Western Civilization Through Literature
 Study of Man Need, values, etc.
 Modern Culture political systems, etc.
- 2. At the end of the quarter each class splits 3 ways and rotates to another teacher. We have worked out this complicated rotation to take care of problem students as well as classes solidifying intogroup cliques, etc., to the disadvantage of some students.
- During quarter a 2 week elective is taught. Students sign up for desired class.

This course is a part of the California mentally gifted minors program. It is, however, not an interdisciplinary course. It is, rather, an advanced literature course. The course to some extent follows the Junior Great Books idea. The limits are extended beyond story line reading by examination of a skilled writer's use of literary techniques. Characterization, simile, metophor, satire, irony, etc. The books read are definitely adult level and challenging. Some examples are: Hemingway, The Old Man and the Sea, A Tale of Troy (Illiad) Greek Heroes - King Arthur and His Knights, The Sword and the Stone, Huckleberry Finn and Eugene O'Neill's The Emperor Jones.

The emphasis is put upon life values and the extension of the student's values.

ERIC AFUILTEST PROVIDED BY ERIC

This course is intended to set youngsters thinking about little known origins of American character and strength - that we are a "a nation of newcomers" and that "minorities have made America great." Under these rubrics we survey immigration and ethnicity past and present.

A key concept to be developed is that all groups coming to our country have encountered common problems, most of which have been solved by most groups. In dealing with the above it is developed that this was not always "our" country; cases in point: American Indians and Mexican-Americans. This is quite mature stuff for adolescents but they are fascinated by it. In this small town I have expected parent and student complaints, but have received none.

Each pupil takes 9 weeks each of art, music, (girls) sewing and cooking, (boys) drawing and woodwork upon the premise that somehow an educative process should provide each student with the opportunity to be exposed to a professional in these areas, because none (or very few) has done so before junior high and most will not do so later.

The program has not been an unqualified success. It might be better if choices were included. It certainly would be better if truly creative units were designed that captured the pupils' attention and satisfied basic desires.

Still feel the basic idea is sound.

The course is designed to acquaint the students with the various forms of the arts and give them a background in the arts. Each teacher teaches the course the way he feels it should be taught. Music emphasis gives the students a chance to discover other musical forms, gives them an opportunity to discover any potential interests they may have in other forms of music besides the one they are now acquainted with. Drama deals with the background of drama, make-up, building sets and all the various things that go into making a production work. They also get the opportunity to act and exposes them to working before a group. Student interest is high because they are running the class and performing. The art section gives them a greater sensitivity to art, gives them a chance to create their own art and teaches them the basic techniques and use of tools.

The problems - too many students to really be able to give them enough opportunity to perform. The classes, to be effective, should be smaller. Other than that, the course seems to be successful.

The Language Arts Department also has a new humanities program - minicourses. The students have a list of 36 courses to choose from - study skills, literature, grammar, stage mechanics, creative drama, "how-to," values, decisions, philosophy of life, humor are just a few. This is working really well and students are enjoying going from teacher to teacher. Courses are a quarter long. They take one class 3 times a week and another 2 times a week.

"Survival" - How to survive on all levels, personal, social, emotional, physical. The survival of groups, animal species, growing things, the planet as a whole.

The major goal was to acquaint the student with himself and to examine our world for problems to be encountered in the process of surviving. In doing this, we drew upon our own experiences, from literatures, from extended perusal of the world about us, from films, speakers, museums. We used a democratic method of operation the first semester, where the students made the decisions as group activities, and students were free to participate or not. We found that some did very little, and others contributed continuously and fully. They became aware of the problems of democracy and of how difficult, and often clumsy, the democratic process can be at times. But, I believe that most of the students have come to appreciate that people must work together in such a process to achieve the best results for everyone. The second semester, we have set several goals for the students because interest was lagging. Also, it seems to me that after 14 or 15 years of having been told what to do constantly it is almost too late to ask students to set their own goals and to be responsible for making themselves work. This should begin much earlier. I am not going to carry this particular program over for the next year because the demand on the teacher in terms of energy and time expended is far, far greater than the results obtained from most of the students.

In an age of unanswered questions, of gnawing doubts, of agonizing reappraisals, the humanities class offers students an opportunity to explore man's search for self-identity through the expression of his humanity in the various forms of art, literature, and music.

Through the integrated study of art, literature, and music, the student will be given the opportunity to develop attitudes and values, to confront values, to inquire into issues, to examine and evaluate examples, and to react freely. He will ask himself such questions as: How do I express my humanity in relating to God, in finding myself, in communicating with others, in appreciating nature, in being a member of society?

Antioch High School: Arts and Humanities Forum, Thomas Beagle, Arts, and team leader; Gayle Mennillo, English; one year; elective for juniors and seniors; 10 units of credit per semester in Art and Humanities Forum, 40 students enrolled each semester. Other art fields are available by arrangement with the specific instructor.

In the Arts and Humanities Forum there is a close cooperation among the team members. The students develop a strong sense of identity with team members; the Forum - a time of interaction between all the members - helps in the development of this identity. They also are involved in the on-going development and evaluation of the class and the opportunity to pursue their individual interests within music, theater, dance, art and film. The Forum meets every day for a two hour block of time. The teachers have a common planning period immediately after the Forum periods.

The conception and organization of the Forum are sophisticated and are the result of constant refining of processes by the team. The structure allows students to develop interests and skills in the arts, starting from where they are and moving toward objectives which they themselves establish and creates a situation in which interrelating the arts is achieved through social interaction and problem solving. A number of special features contribute to the individualizing of learning within the group context; the replacement of the traditional grading system for determining student evaluation with student-teacher evaluations, conferences, and using Glasser's "Schools Without Failure" system; a "contract" system for determining student performance expectations, assignments, and work load, and a series of Antioch Learning Packages, called ALP's, written by team members and students whereby students can learn performance and production skills on their own in the separate arts and in interrelated arts activities. The ALP's are constantly revised by the teachers and new ones written. dents can also write their own ALP's.

A varied array of individual and group projects comprise a year's Forum activities. Students learn to write and perform music, compose a mime sketch, choreograph a dance or movement study, create in a variety of media and materials in art, or improvise dramatic situations. They are expected to attend art shows, plays and film presentations, visit museums and go to lectures, and take part in field trips. At various times, students perform for each other or make presentations to small groups or the whole Forum. A culminating activity for the year is a student-written production (usually a musical) which utilizes all of the arts and involves all members of the Forum, to which the public is invited.

The Humanities Forum is a two-hour class of 30 students, grades 10-12 meeting daily. By selecting from a number of Antioch Learning Packages, the student may pursue studies in theater, art, music, film, television, radio, the press, and English. Students may receive English credit for one of the two periods by proposing a series of Antioch Learning Packages and securing the approval of the English Department chairman.

The Forum explores some of the following questions: "Who are You?" "What talents do you have?" "Do you communicate?" The student can expect to develop experiences in answer to these and other questions that will help him to learn how to guide and govern and communicate in setting up a community for the year 2001.

The Humanities Forum is a part of a humanities interaction program which also includes biology, English II, and English elective course, and possibly a social science course. Together, the classes comprise a Humanities Block Scheduling program. The Humanities Forum meets the same two periods that the other Humanities Block Scheduling classes meet so that interaction between them may take place. Students of the Forum may at times during the year find it most beneficial to pursue their studies under another teacher involved in the Humanities Block Scheduling. It is hoped that this format will provide the student with the greatest possible number of experiences related to his field of interest. In addition, members of the other Block Scheduling classes may find it beneficial to study within the framework of the Forum.

It is suggested that a Community for 2001 A.D. be explored. Some possible exciting questions might include: Where will you be in the year 2001 A.D.? What will you be doing then? What about the population explosion then? Will our environment be the same in 2001 as it is now? What will the community be like in 2001 A.D.? Courses will explore the community from their own point of view, and develop skills in each student that could be used when the total group is brought together to discuss a project.

This is an elective course open to sophomores, juniors, and seniors. The course is designed to compare the trends of art movements of various countries through a study of social economic, and philosophical pressures on the artists, to teach an appreciation and enjoyment of art through art criticism and discussions by analyzing original work of art and slides, and to explore art and its meaning as an integral part of the humanities. Field trips to museums and art shows are included. The area lends itself to such a course because of the opportunities for students in the Bay Area who are interested in Art History. The only problem we had in beginning is to let students know that this course would be offered as an elective.

I would liken my Humanities course to a collage. Each day in a given week may be different. I have attempted to center the semester around a) art and the artist, b) communication. Because of the wide range of students in the course the approach is impressionist, i.e., upon hearing a Beethoven sonata, students discuss and write about how it makes them "feel," what they might "see," and how it might be related to other art forms on expressions of communication and feeling, rather than the academic parts of the musical piece. (This may be touched upon, however.) Students are encouraged from the beginning to further their own study of things they find interesting. This has obvious built-in problems. have found that those students who are imaginative and motivated (not necessarily college-prep students) will seize this opportunity and grow There are other students, however, who take advantage of the freedom given in the course and never literally "take it home with them." My rationalims for these students is that they are experiencing (to a limited degree) and coming in contact with things (specifically art) which they ordinarily would not. Each quarter a project is required - a book, an audio-visual presentation, a report relating to the arts or a demonstration. College-prep students are encouraged to read a book or books which fall into a classical reference. Because I am trying for personal responses rather than "arty" responses, it is very important that students feel good about themselves and the people in the class. Much emphasis is placed on sharing and respecting others. Students have made collages of themselves and brought into class an object "which represents you" and shared them. They are encouraged to share artistic talents, and projects have been presented in the lines of Karate, macrame, dance, painting, music -- even taxidermy. The above mentioned experiences tie into our discussions on communication and awareness. I may show a film on Leonardo Devinci one day and on another day show one of the many excellent county films which are supposedly for elementary school youngsters, i.e., clay, rainshowers, The Red Balloon, etc. Although I will play my Bach and Beethoven, students are encouraged to also play "their" This past semester students typed and dittoed off the lyrics of such people as Leonard Cohen, Carole King, and Cat Stevens and played the recordings for the class. I have used The Art of Loving with the class and find the discussions excellent (but only after I have simplified the material for the majority of students). Because of the material, the structure, and the students, Humanities is a most gratifying and even relaxing course to teach.

Afterthought: I find I cannot run my other classes in Sophomore English or Philosophy in this manner.

This course is designed to give the student a background in the very exciting and diverse field of Shakespeare studies. Because this subject is a very rich and extensive one, the course will be given in survey form with required readings from different periods in Shakespeare's career. The course will be made up of several kinds of activity, the main ones of which are listed below.

Evaluation - In order to test the student's comprehension of assigned readings there will be periodic quizzes. Tests and summary activities will be announced and will usually be given on each study unit.

Enrichment - As part of a plan to make the study of Shakespeare's plays vivid and exciting there will be a number of slide programs, films and records used to accompany each study unit. Students will be held responsible for the information contained in these programs.

Cultural Events - Also as part of the "enrichment" program of the course students will be required to attend two outside cultural events during the First Report Period. These events could be plays or films, a musical concert, an art exhibit, a school play, or even an hour-long IV documentary. Check with the teacher for prior approval of events you plan to attend. Reporting sheets will be provided for this purpose, and announcements of coming events will be posted on the bulletin board.

Term Project - The Second Report Period each student will be required to complete a term project in which he or she will become an "expert" on some particular aspect of Shakespeare's life, work or times.

Our course is given for ten units of credit, but not English credit. I urge you, if you have any curriculum flexibility in your school, to develop a program separate and safe from the literary claws of your English department.

Part of the success of our humanities program at Las Lomas has centered on the recreation of the course each year based on available human resources, the talents of those teachers and students who show up the first week. After the first week the course has had the flexibility to shift (once in awhile we dance) toward filling actual learning needs, as these needs become clear.

If your school district moves as our district has moved, in the direction of PPBS or behavioral objectives at "level VI," this approach is destroyed because PPBS asks you, if I understand correctly, to predict future changes in behavior of human beings you have not even met.

"The course comprises student and teacher initiated projects, utilizing art, music, literature, philosophy, anthropology, and architecture. Emphasis is upon the learning and insight which students and teacher bring to each other as the projects develop and are presented.

'Investigative' as well as cultural field trips are planned and guest speakers are invited." (1970-71 description of Gordon Lindsay's course.)

A unique Humanities program has been developed at Pacifica High School in the Mt. Diablo Unified School District. Students who are identified as potentially mentally gifted, but culturally disadvantaged, participate in a course designed to provide experiences which will enrich their lives and help them develop individual potential. Students meet every day for two class periods with an art teacher and an English teacher. An instrumental and vocal music teacher also has been engaged on a consultant basis when his assistance is appropriate to the current class content.

These students have studied man and his culture--tracing human development from earliest beginnings to present day culture. During a unit on Greece, for example, students read about Greek history and civilization. They visited a museum and art gallery to see examples of Grecian art. Slides, records, and films were used to provide background. Each student tried to develop an understanding of Aristotle's theory of happiness, and the class read aloud selections from Plato and about Socrates. A business teacher at Pacifica High School, who is of Greek ancestry and has lived in Greece, visited the class to discuss modern Greece, geography, climate and life style. At a second class meeting she taught students Greek dances. Even the most self conscious participated. On a third day she helped members cook a Greek meal.

The symbol of Pacifica High School is the Spartan. As an art project the students built an eight foot Spartan to be displayed at athletic events. Additionally each youngster created an individual art project for public showing.

During the time the Drama Department was preparing the play, "Medea," the drama teacher visited the class and discussed the development of Greek drama, the concepts of tragedy and comedy, and the format of the Greek theater. Later, students participating in the play came to the class to read their parts in an informal atmosphere which provided Humanities students with an opportunity to see how characters in a play are developed and to ask questions of those actually involved.

As a concluding activity, the class members, guest teachers, and regular instructors spent an evening together at an authentic Greek restaurant. After dinner the students participated in Greek dances and watched Greek entertainment—the highlight of which was a dance during which one of the Greeks carried a table in his teeth with one of the Humanities students on it. There is a heavy emphasis on field trips in this program in order to dramatize classroom activity and learning. The students have a high interest in planning their trips and always seem so enthusiastic about relating their class unit to a destination or new experience.

At present our Humanities students are concluding a unit on Man and His Environment with a study of flight. Each student has developed an individual project representing his or her concept of flight and the class has read and written poetry related to flight and man in space. The class also took a trip to a local air field for "ground instruction." On that same trip they toured the Control Tower and sat in the cockpit of some private planes. The conclusion of this unit will be a flight experience during which the students will fly with a certified flight instructor and each youngster will sit in the co-pilot's seat and see his world from a new and exciting vantage point.

The general objectives of this Humanities program for culturally disadvantaged mentally gifted minors are threefold: 1) to prepare the student for adult roles; 2) to enhance the student's self concept; and 3) to care for human development. We feel it is working.

15. This is a semester course for the student who wishes to study American culture through the mass media; films, records, magazines, newspapers, paperback books, records and tales. Activities involve reading, writing, discussions, role-playing and simulation games based on the films, reading materials, and records used in the class. The class has been offered for two years and the signup has gone from 50 students the first semester to approximately 250 students this last semester.

There isn't a text for the course though the teachers have put one together for their own use. Next year this teacher-text will probably be handed out to students. The materials used in the course range from reading in the Saturday Review to Mad Magazine and Peanuts.

I simply want the students to sing. Because their interest lies in the popular idiom most of the music introduced is popular. After they discover the joys of singing, other types of music are carefully introduced.

There is no provision for the academic student to become involved which automatically limits the type of student who may elect music--a main concern.

Recruitment in the feeder schools has been suggested and a critical evaluation of the academic program has begun.

Students generally feel that taking a chorus class gives them opportunity to goof off--a fallacy which is slowly being proven untrue.

Goals:

- 1. To increase the musical awareness through score reading, sight singing, harmonizing
- 2. Develop the singing voice

The goal of the teacher is to provide the students with an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the cultural sources of Western Culture and to become aware of the differences existing in Asian cultures.

An attempt is made to introduce some of the art forms of the various cultures and eras of ancient and medieval society.

Literary examples are made available also. In fact, the emphasis is on cultural history rather than on political events.

Enrollment by student choice, although the course is noted as required, is explained by the fact that students may choose one or two semester courses from a variety of offerings. Usually eight choices have been offered, and the five most often selected are presented. When time is available, African cultural origins are explored.

This course is the outcome of a student petition in order to satisfy student needs and to utilize the abilities of a faculty member who holds a Ph.D. in Philosophy and areas related to Humanities. Student reponse has been good.

The methodology employed is the following:

- Phase 1 The instructor presents the topic in a series of lectures which welcome questions and class discussion.
- Phase 2 The students meet in small groups of 3 or 4 to discuss the topic, for a day or two.
- Phase 3 The entire class meets for general discussion for 2 days, usually.
- Phase 4 The student writes a short essay about the topic and discussion. Logical analysis and originality of thought are emphasized.

During each quarter, 3 main topics are presented together with occasional discussions of emerging contemporary issues (usually 3); the instructor reproduces articles from pertinent magazines, etc., and presents them to the class for evaluation. In addition, students are required to write a report on a philosophic topic of their choice.

It appears that the students who are engaged in this type of work are of obvious college caliber. The topics discussed have been in response to student requests and instructor's suggestions.

The main goal of the course is to introduce students to the enriching experiences open to them in the field of the humanities. Something of the excitement in the realm of ideas and something of the pleasure of aesthetic encounters is made apparent to the students through an introduction to philosophy, a glimpse of great works of art, and readings in the great literary works.

Student interest fluctuates and there are ups and downs in enrollment figures and in the enthusiasm of the students actually enrolled; there are known and unknown variables involved.

The main problems encountered are similar to the main problems of any classes in a public school situation. For example, philosophy may be fascinating and art may be gratifying but outside activities are for more exciting (sex, drugs, etc). Another problem is that counselors in our comprehensive high school tend to send us any illiterate who needs a class to fill a gap in his schedule.

Evaluation has not presented a great problem. Grades must be given because the administration requires them. But student work tends easily to fall into a good to excellent category or to be non-existent, resulting in "no-credit."

The only other comment that should perhaps be added is that I have enjoyed teaching this course for the last ten years or so because it has been entirely different each year with each new group of students and so it has been a learning experience for me as well as for the students. For instance, our focus has sometimes shifted to such new areas (for me) as social anthropology, Jungian psychology, primitive African art, or Icelandic sagas!

A team of three teachers (to be expanded to four) is attempting to initiate a program of inter-disciplinary studies which we refer to as an "inter-related studies program." We hope to provide a situation integrating the basic high school academic curriculum into an integrated program of study as opposed to the fragmented, departmentalized program of the traditional school program. We feel this would provide a relevance currently lacking in a traditional high school curriculum. In addition, it is felt that we, as faculty and students, shall benefit from an association with each other in several areas of study during the school day far beyond the brief association of one teacher with an entire class for 45 or 50 minutes in one isolated subject area.

Our goals have not been formally stated, but it is my personal feeling that, as a result of participation in this program, a student should feel that his educational experience has been more relevant to the life around him and he should feel a greater satisfaction with his cognizance of the natural inter-relationships of the many facets of his physical, biological and social environment. This cognizance will not have been left to a possible association in his mind of many facts presented in the isolation booths of departmental course offerings but will have been developed by intent as a primary objective of the program.

It is our intention to maintain as truly flexible a schedule as possible to permit and encourage a natural, spontaneous learning situation to develop without the ordinary constraint of time.

We are limiting our program to 10th through 12th grades on the premise that 9th graders have not experienced the traditional program and, therefore, could not properly select this program as an alternative.

We have not, as yet, determined the criteria for student selection except to state that we seek general students who may benefit from such a program of inter-related studies, who have achieved some degree of success within the traditional curriculum, who are hopeful in their educational pursuit, and who are not in the crisis position of requiring any alternative or "dropping out."

We expect to be able to certify credit for at least the academic school curriculum directly to the records office. We further expect this program to occupy the student's school day for one year.

While we are still in the planning and development stage we felt that our program might merit consideration for your survey.

- 1. The elementary school curriculum has had to water down its basic skills concentration because of the introduction of too many elements.
- 2. Relatively few elementary teachers have either the time or the necessary background to concentrate on arts and/or humanities to the degree implied in the questionnaire.
- 3. Our district has no coordinators or supervisors in any area because of lack of funds.
- 4. In most of our classrooms, arts and humanities are rather incidental, dependent primarily on the interests and abilities of particular teachers and time available after concentration on the basic skills.
- 5. At McPherson School, we have the following identifiable specifics in the arts and/or humanities. (Other classes do something in these areas, usually in combination with integrated subject matter.)
 - A. Third grades--Mrs. Nancy Tindell and Miss Gloria Russell teach recorders to whole class.
 - B. Sixth grade teacher, Mrs. Charlotte Biggs, occasionally offers some French or Spanish, dependent upon the makeup of a particular class.
 - C. We have recently started an activity day for all upper graders that involves groups in arts, crafts, first aid, Spanish, guitar, etc.

While we recognize the desirable aspects of intensive work in the arts and humanities, we feel that as long as we have little money, unstructured talent and a primary responsibility to teaching basic skills, we are obligated to leave formal teaching in these areas to the secondary schools, where more money and more specialists are available.

Students seemed interested in all projects which were completed successfully (arrowhead making, language noun-verb use, Oriental fans, Spanish treasure maps and Negro shields.

Purpose of "breaking down" prejudice seemed successful. Students seemed especially interested in origins of groups - entry into this country and current problems.

The final examination was a 3-part examination:

- 1. What are the current problems of the minority group of your choice?
- 2. What is being done on the local state or federal level to overcome these difficulties?
- 3. What can you (the student) do to alleviate these difficulties?

The students gave this phase of the course much thought and came forth with many worthwhile ideas. To remove prejudice (at home - in school - within the community) and several wanted to make it a national issue by starting a campaign, "Napa, the Community That Cares."

This course is not organized along thematic lines, but various themes are dealt with on occasion. A common theme (that is, one that has been used more than once in the past) is a "search" to be conducted by each student in the course of the semester. Beginning with the reading and discussing of Siddhartha and Man's Search for Meaning, each student chooses something he wants to search for (knowledge or information, available from books or from direct experience) and signs an agreement to carry out such a search. The teacher provides resources as the student needs them, helps look for materials, makes suggestions, etc. The student reports in some way to the teacher - in writing or orally - at the end of the semester.

As ideas arise - in literature or art, in daily life on in affairs of state - we discuss them from a philosophical point of view: what is the good? what is truth? how do we determine what is right? Much emphasis is placed on drawing from one's own experience and then reflecting on that experience, then calling in other sources of knowledge to help us understand the experience (Socrates, Camus, Aeschylus - on and on).

There is a good deal of music and art available constantly, and sometimes the teacher presents it to the class; at other times the students help themselves to it. In the discussion of aesthetic values, no attempt is made to impose judgments on students - none of this "what is good or bad art?" business. Rather, the student is encouraged to construct his own aesthetic values and to trust his own judgments.

Students' creativity is also encouraged, both in writing and in other expressive forms. We work with clay, with papier-mache, with pastels and butcher paper, anything that we can find to work with. Much of the work is unplanned and non-directed, but sometimes we work on specific projects.

There is not too much overt structure to the course, but the underlying purposes are carried out. These purposes are to re-awaken creativity in students, to help them develop confidence in their own judgments - intellectual, aesthetic, moral - to draw on their own experience, to see things whole...and many more.

The course revolves around the question, "What is a man?" We study religions (Genesis, Pig Veda), to see how man views his origins. Philosophy - The Noble Savage - to look at a Golden Age. From there we study some "savage" cultures comparing them with U.S. The aborigines of Australia serve as a separate group, the family as a theme. Then we study "Reality" - Plato's ideals, Lucritus Materialism, Lao-tye's Tao. Man, the creator, comes next with a study of art, centered on technique as well as how man sees himself and his environment. Then on to "goals" of life - hedonism, stoicism, Superman, etc., ending up with Frowns & Love.

All year long, we diverge into a wide variety of fields because the original question - What is a man? - is far from answered.

I'm also thinking about adding something of futurism soon.

We have no programs of the type described in progress at the moment and I'm sorry that I have none to report.

We had one fine teacher, Miss Catherine Blaney, at our school last year when we were a K-6 school, who had an excellent program emphasizing the Arts and Humanities at fifth grade level. Miss Blaney is now teaching at Geary Elementary School, San Francisco. Her principal's name is Mr. Joseph Stallone. I suggest that you contact Mr. Stallone for permission to obtain a description of Miss Blaney's 1970-71 program should you be interested.

We are beginning an Ethnic Art Workshop this month. Through E.S.A.P. funds we are hiring four consultant-artists who will come to our school and bring ideas and activities related to their race and/or culture. They will plan with teachers and volunteer-parents and then initiate "Ethnic" art activities with each class of children. The teachers will follow through with the projects once the artist's six hours of "guidance" is through. The volunteer-parents will rotate their time to keep art room open for small groups of children or individual pupils who can come in and create what they wish, using skills they have learned earlier.

Since so much of the other school activities (Reading, Math, etc.) are individualized, we feel our new "integrated" school needs to show children how to work together cooperatively through Art.

One teacher will be responsible for evaluation of this workshop. Her gifted pupils' "Visual Literacy" group will photograph the workshop in action, develop, enlarge, print photos to help tell the story of what we are doing. Teachers will fill out questionnaires regarding their opinions of program's worth.

The main goals of the course are: (1) to introduce the students to various ethnic minorities in America, (2) to promote on understanding of the cultural tradition of these groups in America, (3) to promote ethnic minority cultural awareness and pride, and (4) to promote an appreciation of the contributions these groups had made toward the growth of America.

The content of the class is usually based on a past-present approach for each group. Things, such as, how and why they come to America and their cultural contributions. The students participate in those kind of activities listed under number 13.

The over-all interest of the students is good. They tend to become more enthusiastic when studying about their own group.

The main problem in teaching Ethnic Studies is finding books and other instructional materials that are suitable for each group. This problem necessitates a great deal of research on the part of the teacher.

Humanities, a 9th Gr. English Elective was conceived and developed during a curriculum workshop in the summer of 1969, by four English teachers. We have a multi-ethnic, student body here at Everett and the course was designed to reflect the various cultures of our students. In addition to black literature, music, etc., we utilized Latino, Filipino, Chinese, Indian, and other cultural heritages. The course is an elective in the sense that a student may choose to take it in lieu of five other 9th grade courses, but it is not to take the place of his required English course.

Humanities course of study is centered around four principle themes, Man and His Identity, Man and His Society, Man and His Environment, Man and His Gods (or Values). Activities emphasize individual and small group work, a daily "journal," and a project to be completed at the conclusion of each thematic unit. This last might involve comparative religions, and in-depth study of a particular culture's music, or art, etc. An attempt is made to involve the student by doing, rather than overwhelming him with listening and viewing activities.

Our core course is intended to have students find identity through a humanities approach to minority literature and additionally have them gain self-pride through ethnic studies. "White Studies" has been attempted for the first time this term. Our course is constantly undergoing revision.

Formerly, we provided two separate courses; now, we are providing a core with part of the week devoted to English and Humanities and part of the week devoted to Social Studies and Ethnic Studies.

This course was begun with a thematic approach in the Fall of 1969 at Everett Junior High School. It is modified and revised each term because of the varied type of students coming into the class. It has been received differently at Opportunity Junior High School as compared with Everett.

Based on the assumption that although certain skills may be taught by subject disciplines, knowledge may not be confined to departments, the Survival Course has led students and teachers to seek data in the areas of Social Studies, Language Arts, Fine Arts, Music, Science, etc.

The goals of this interdisciplinary course are:

- 1. To increase the individual sense of self-worth.
- To increase awareness of and respect for other individuals and their right to be treated as individuals.
- 3. To increase the sense of identity through an awareness of his relationship to his culture, language and to the family of man.
- 4. To develop skills of visual, auditory and sensory perception.
- 5. To develop skills of coping in a changing society.
- 6. To develop conscious and objective patterns for problem solving.
- 7. To assist the student in developing skills, to be a self-starting learner, a self-directed independent and involved person.

Survival in the classroom and in life begins with self-knowledge, followed by knowledge of the people touching on our lives and the world around us. We used games and exercises to make the students more aware of themselves and each other, discussed the meaning of survival and defined together areas of survival study. We discussed books on survival recommended by students and worked on individual and small group research projects on survival topics. We had many guest speakers and student presentations. We painted the classroom and pupil desks together and worked on a school and neighborhood cleanup campaign covered by KGO-TV news. Students are keeping journals and writing individual magazines.

Pupil expectation is unusually high for a course of this type and it takes a while for students to realize that real learning is taking place. Once this happens, pupils discover that getting people to be cooperative in a democratic setting is a difficult but worthwhile goal. They are aware of the problems of democracy, but feel it is the best system. Students feel relaxed and open. Trust is developing.

Scheduling a class like this in existing public schools is difficult. We need a block of time for projects, field trips. We have found that there is more teacher labor than results accomplished.

Since I teach in a school that is about one-third Oriental-American, I had a double purpose in teaching Asian studies:

- 1. to make these students aware of their heritage
- 2. to make the non-Oriental students less ethnocentric, more willing to to see the whole world, not just the western world.

I was lucky enough to start with a high interest level so it has been a fairly easy year so far. Our major problem has been lack of materials and money plus an actively discouraging attitude about field trips. There is very little in the way of Oriental literature in translation so we did a unit on Haiku and Tanka. Also individual students did their own research on the literature. Also as a part of the English curriculum each student is responsible for a magazine of their own creation including an editorial, creative essay, expository essay, descriptive essay, original ads, etc. For their social studies they have done three research reports, one oral report and their choice of some creative project: visiting Chinatown, planning a field trip, demonstrating Chinese or Oriental Art and Music, etc.

Model United Nations is a class in which, after basic instruction in parliamentary procedure, structure and function of United Nations, and research methods, the students simulate the activities of the United Nations. We generally play three games and each student has experience in defending the actions of three nations.

The more players, the better. I have 65 but could cheerfully handle 120. Enthusiasm is self-generating and teacher's role is principally as a listening post for ideas. It's a good class for developing oral skills and research skills and group skills (leadership, followership, etc.). Ninth grade is a good year for it. Evaluation is on a contractual basis, for obvious reasons.

Our students have been raised on TV, very few have been fortunate enough to have been forced to develop an imagination. My goal, therefore, was to have the student experience the extreme satisfaction of communicating, interpretation of the intellectual and emotional values of the literature in our course of study. In order to use the media to any degree of success, he would have to become a more sophisticated listener, becoming aware of the sounds of words suggesting ideas and feelings - the sound of music to establish mood or to use as a transitional device, etc. He would be forced to visualize, to imagine and then relay his understanding to an audience through the use of taped recordings, radio production, film with sound, and if possible, video taping.

This course, though elected by students, takes the place of the required English course for 9th grade. This has created a problem - the matter of time. There is not enough time to cover adequately the required English curriculum, give a "mini" course in oral interpretation, and help develop ideas, create scripts, produce shows. Most of the students have logged so many hours in front of the "idiot" box, they have never learned the joy of hearing the sounds of words as they read silently. If I read a selection to them they become enthralled, then quickly lose interest when they have to continue reading the selection silently, yet they have a definite need for gathering impressions, ideas, emotions, understandings - their own experience is too limited. Therefore, I believe I've envisioned too grand a success and must be content with smaller achievement - yet, certainly, any fulfillment on the students' level would not be small to him!

By dealing with students who are presumed to have mastered the minimum requirements, teachers and students are freed from external curriculum requirements and are able to develop units which are mutually satisfying. The semester has three units of six weeks. At the end of each unit, each student may choose to work with any of the teachers on a unit which: (1) has been suggested, (2) finds student interest, and (3) a teacher is willing to teach. It is hoped that, in addition to the content of the units, the format will encourage: (1) greater student involvement, (2) greater teacher flexibility, and (3) a more humanistic interaction between the two groups.

Potential pitfals - the group of teachers involved must be large enough to offer a spectrum and yet not so large as to prohibit their coming together either physically or ideologically. We find that five is probably too many. The people involved should have sufficient ego strength to accept the possibility that all students do not choose him, or -- for that matter -- any. Because it is impossible to anticipate what units will finally be offered, there should be some kind of drawing fund for materials; and, because there is virtually no lead time to develop the materials, some support time for running dittos, running over to the book store, etc. This support, either clerical or teacher released time, is useful, but not essential. Evaluation -- it is still early, but some positive signs: Since the beginning of the semester, once the word got around, there has been an increase of about 25% in enrollment by students who have transferred from other classes. There have been reports of students who cut all of their other classes but manage to get to Mosaic English. This could be the "halo" effect. On the other hand we find that six weeks is pretty short a time; perhaps too short a time to get to know the students well enough to deal with attitudinal matters which this format is wide open for. On balance I would like to continue, and I believe the other teachers do also. By the time that you read this we will have done a more substantial job of evaluation. Feel free to contact us.

One possibility that we have not yet put into practice is offering independent study for one of the six week units; that is, if a student wants to follow up on something that can't be offered as a class, either because not enough students are interested or because none of the teachers feels competent, he follows it down on his own under the guidance of one of the teachers. Six weeks avoids the principal danger of independent study; that time will get away from the student, teacher, or both.

Our aim is to provide study beyond four years of a foreign language for students who wish to keep up their foreign language after coming in to our third year as sophomores. Our goal is to expand the student's knowledge of the language and country where the language is spoken, to broaden their horizons. We read a number of short stories of famous authors, poems, philosophical material as well as current articles. Each student elects a subject for each of the two report periods in which reading and study is carried on individually. This is in various fields of personal interest music, art, etc.

We have plans for 1972 of a four day class week with a fifth day in a special laboratory where students may work individually on make up, review, more advanced audio-study, reading, see film strips, etc., to immerse them in the culture of the foreign language they are studying.

My personal objective is to stimulate thinking and choice making without moralizing; to encourage communication between students, parents, and community; to demonstrate human behavior and help students recognize their human similarities and differences.

I have found that the greatest problem is one of time. Since there are only nine weeks in which to complete what is on the enclosed course outline, I have been "tightening up."

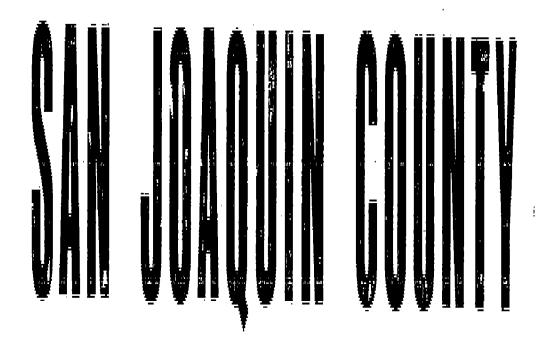

The students have been very enthusiastic to my program. Successful activities are psychodrama and simulation games. They appeal to the "ham" in almost all young people and offer them the opportunity to play a role different to one they are accustomed to be in.

Audio-visual materials are very important. You cannot talk about a penis or a vagina you have to show them. Slides are most practical. My own family (young wife and one year old daughter) as "guest" speakers. Also V.D. Clinic contact traces, homosexuality, heterosexuality, transvestism persons from the community.

Lastly, my own attitude toward teaching - I enjoy it and I suppose my attitude is reflected in my students.

The beginning Spanish course I am offering is basically an introductory one due to the time period of which I have for instruction. The course involves introducing the students to everyday greetings, numbers, common verbs and above all, a long list of vocabulary words. With the aid of record sets (of beginning Spanish) the Spanish program can be very effective and thus prove to give a student some background in a very widely used language.

The course is designed to have students come to grips with the problems philosophy tries to solve: who am I?, what is real?, what is meaningful?, where am I going?, what is it all for?

A thematic approach is used. Students often have control of the class themselves, introducing their own material and concepts. Chairs are placed in a circle for maximum encounter. Strong emphasis on encounter and identify problems. Transactional analysis is introduced as a device to understand human behavior. In addition, we have held two day-long "institutes" where we deal with human communication and encounter.

The course, one of a complete elective program in academic subjects for 8th and 9th graders at Vallejo Jr. High has been organized just this semester. The class is still forming but probably will not exceed twenty. After three weeks, the class appears to have reasonable unity and is moving in the direction the teacher wishes it to go. Circle discussions were held frequently during these three weeks, but the students had no ideas for the format of the course, so the teacher is organizing it. It appears that some structure is a necessity. This will be to require students to bring in a news clipping (or equivalent from radio or TV) each week and tell the group something about it. A problem, formulated by teacher each week, will be "solved" by each student on the basis of his own thinking and opinions and shared with the group.

Each member will be urged to challenge and/or question and/or comment. Hopefully from these sharings will come some form of role - playing activity and possibly debates and panel discussions. Hopefully, guests (from related fields) will be able to attend at times. All discussions will be while seated in a circle. Each student will do personal study, research, interviewing, on subjects throughout the semester as a series of "personal choice projects," perhaps to be shared.

Some research topics are: marijuana legalization, racial problems, war, crime, youth-adult relationships, consumer problems, et al. Some problems to be "solved" will be posed as though the student were in the position of a citizen, a person in an administrative position, or someone faced with a problem needing an immediate solution.

Some of these "problems" will be: a secondary school principal's need to solve a problem (reported by students) of a teacher lowering students' grades because of behavior; what should a black householder do when faced with vandalism, insults, threats, after moving his family into a home in an all-white neighborhood; a major and city council of a medium-sized industrial city (prosperously polluted) is faced by growing, organized antipollution groups who demand that something be done, including, if necessary, forcing the prosperity-producing industries to spend large sums in research to eliminate pollution.

Goals are: to develop a feeling that learning can be enjoyable; to help the young person to come to think critically and independently; to learn to share with (and, specifically, in this case, not just teacher) a group to accept constructive criticism; to learn to listen to others' viewpoints and recognize their validity; and perhaps even "solve" a few problems at the same time.

Student makes two in-depth studies a year in any of these areas: Art, Architecture, Dance, Drama, Education, History, Literature, Music, Religion, Philosophy, Psychology, Science, or Social Science. Does research, using classroom library and school library for 3 or 4 weeks. Student is not confined to classroom, may go to library daily on special 3 week pass after reporting for roll call at beginning and end of period. Student is given a list of several hundred suggested topics in the broad subject areas listed, but he is free to select others. Student produces a long written report at end of research time. Each student presents his report orally to the class. This may take several days to a week, depending on how much class discussion there is during the presentation. Discussion at any point in the report is allowed. Rest of class take notes on the reports. Students may work alone or in small groups in researching a topic and produce a joint report.

Student does two creative projects a year, choosing from a list suggested by the teacher or suggesting his own. These should be in an area in which he has no or very little experience. The emphasis is not on the end product but on the creative experience itself and what it enables him to find out about himself. For example, the projects might be: writing a script and making a film, painting in abstract style, sculpting in clay, wood, soap, plaster of Paris, etc., writing and staging a one act play, designing a dance for a poem. The list suggests about 35 different types of creative projects. Student may work alone or with a small group. At the end of three weeks, student presents his project to the class, describing what obstacles he encountered, what he discovered about himself and what his project revealed to him about himself, and what he gained from it, etc.

Mid-term and end of year examinations are held with questions given several days before the actual examination so that students may spend about 3 days in class studying in small groups to review their notes, to go over the important parts of the reports, and to formulate "answers." Questions are the type that require a restructuring of the material learned. For example, a test question after the study of a primitive culture might be: Prove that a the culture of the people of _____ is the best possible one suited for them in their environment.

Another assignment is an end of the year paper to be written without research during class time from a list of about ten topics which tend to incorporate what the student has learned with conclusions he has drawn. Sample topics from the list are: My philosophy of life, My concept of Man, My concept of God, What it is to be a human being, etc. These subjects relate to the objectives of the course.

The course is popular and successful because: (1) students study what they want - they are interested in the subject, (2) there is much discussion and interaction, (3) there is much variety of subject matter, (4) students begin to see relationships in various fields, for example - a study of Freud's theories of the subconscious would have bearing on a study of surrealistic art, or a report on the theatre of the absurd would relate to one on existenialism, (5) the emphasis is on the "Personal Value" or personal significance of the subject matter, it's enrichment of the student's life.

We have made our own color slide collection of thousands of art masterpieces, both classical and modern, the school photography class photographing art works in art books.

Music:

An effort is being made to develop lesson plans in music which involve: theory and note reading; experiences in playing the piano; group singing; two part singing; and music appreciation. Music Appreciation includes classical, opera, semi-classical, jazz, and contemporary forms.

Art:

The children are being exposed to different media available for use in art. To date they have experimented with crayon, water color, tissue paper, wax paper; and in the future will experiment with string, foil (aluminum), collages, gadget art, and pottery (clay), if possible. We have studied the color wheel, analogous colors, warm and cool colors and how to mix these ourselves. The children have worked with design, drawings, cut and paste and seemingly enjoy their projects.

We operate what we call our electives program for a full hour one day a week to supplement any and all activities of similar nature that may be included in the self-contained classrooms. Pupils in grades 4-6 are included.

Eight teachers plus 2 primary teachers plus some parent help, make up the staff for the electives program. Elective offerings are described much as college courses in a catalogue. Pupils are allowed to designate 1st through 3rd choices from 10 to 12 offerings each semester. Second and 3rd choices are utilized administratively to control group sizes within necessary bounds. Offerings fluctuate from semester to semester based on interest shown by pupils in their choices or on preferences and talents of staff members. Offerings in the past have included, creative writing, drama and play writing, chorus, art, pantomine, painting, crafts, ceramics, foreign language exploration, and others.

Generally speaking, the course is successful and well-received by the student: who find in the humanities class opportunities for more open discussion than is available in classes that of necessity are more rigidly structured. Also, because the course touches on many areas of human activity, each student is likely to find something that specifically and directly interests him. Sharing by individuals of their specific interests is enriching for all, and many, thereby, find new and unexpected interests.

Probably humanities should be a year, rather than a semester, course. The possibilities for student growth and gain in such a course - an exploration of all that springs from man's creativeness - are limitless.

A copy of our humanities curriculum guide, which describes the general content and objectives of the class will be sent upon request. Each year, of course, the specific materials used are subject to change.

ERIC Full first Provided by ETIC

It is open to experiencing the past in man and in the present in becoming a more humane Human.

We try to become an integrated group where the individual is important. We try to resolve the dichotomy between self-society by: (1) politeness, (2) consideration, (3) understanding, and (4) cooperation. By doing this, we can grow in surprising ways and in many directions.

We help each other to grow. We write and share journals, we plan and do events, we evolve into a close group and share this with the school and community.

Sometimes it doesn't work and we/us as humanity wonder but then we work in another direction.

It's a great course.

15. Description of the course or program:

This course is innovative - strictly on a constantly creative basis in response to non-overtly acquired feedback. The course cannot be duplicated nor inspirational since it is dependent entirely upon the interaction of people (people being defined as staff, students, community and administration) who are determined to explore the concept of Humanities. The goal is to create the individual primarily on the basis of human interaction with emphasis on the remote and immediate past while experiencing whatever is available in the present in regards to anticipating the future. Our basic philosophy is that no man is an island and no course is the answer. Our goal is to create an urge, constantly seeking that which is man incorporated and functioning. The urge should stress acceptance and understanding, humility, and the idea that the real man is dependent upon trust in his own intuition. Each man is valid.

The people are extremely involved in it - emphasizing the fact that education is not the teacher's prerogative but that of human beings.

15. Description of the course or program:

Four years ago, we at Modesto High School began a "pilot program" in the Humanities by synchronizing the offerings of four existing courses and instituting a fifth: Art Humanities. The other four were: Dance Productions, Advanced Acting, and Masterpieces (senior English). By the end of the third year, it had become obvious that the plan of operation was neither satisfactory nor desirable for many reasons, and so it was mutually agreed that we would not offer the "humanities" portion of the program this year. The "humanities" portion had consisted of large group meetings approximately two to three days a week, at which time various related aspects of the arts were discussed, films were shown, guests made presentations, students performed, etc. Although this sounds good on paper, it did not work out that well, partially due to the fact that the content of the courses was not really "geared" to what was intended for the "humanities" portion of the courses. Thus, . we applied to the Board of Education for a grant for curriculum development, with which to prepare a totally new program for Fall, 1972.

It will be called Head and Heart and is open to all students, grades 9-12. Sophomores and above may elect to take it for up to one year of English credit or (projected) social studies credit. It is offered through the art department. Its main focus is on developing and increasing the student's powers to react to his environment (social as well as natural, mental as well as physical) in rational, meaningful, and aesthetic ways.

Instructors working on the project, and projected to teach in it, are: Pete Cislo, literature; Dennis Clark, music; Loren Horton, social studies; Jane Iribarren, dance; Jim Shuman, art; and Paul Tischer, drama. In addition, there are also twelve students working on the project committee, two from each of the six areas.

Although guest lecture/demonstrations, AV presentations, and field trips are considered important adjuncts to the course, our main teaching method will be teacher-designed, student-elected minicourses, only the first of which will be compulsory: Search for Self. Subsequently, at 2- to 3-week intervals, each student will select a new topic for study from the six then being offered. Thus, some 60 to 80 minicourses will be offered during the year, of which each student will study perhaps 10 or 15.

Grading will be P/NM unless a letter grade is requested at the beginning of the semester. To give both students and instructors a feeling of stability within this constantly changing structure, each student will receive a "humanities advisor" (one of the instructors) at the beginning of the semester, to whom he will be responsible for meeting course requirements, and who will periodically meet with him to review his progress.

It is felt that the courses formerly offered together as "humanities" can now become second-year "continuation study" for many students who become interested in the arts through our new course, and who might not otherwise have become involved in creative self-expression. Since we have included social studies in the new program, speculative plans are now being discussed toward a second-year elective course for that area.
